

TALK ON BOUNDARY STONES.

Fred E. Woodward to Lecture at Smithsonian Institution.

Fred E. Woodward, manager of the book department of Woodward & Lothrop, will deliver an illustrated lecture on the original boundary or milestones of the District of Columbia, at the lecture hall of the Smithsonian Institution, on the evening of Thursday, January 27, at 8 o'clock.

The meeting is held in the interests of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and under the auspices of a special committee having to do with the marking and preservation of historical places.

Much interest has been awakened recently by the commemoration of two of these stones with impressive ceremonies and it is hoped that in the near future some suitable protection may be placed about these stones, by this organization, which will safeguard these venerable monuments of the early days of the nation's own bit of ground. It is safe to say that very few of our people have any idea of the existence and location of these old milestones. Mr. Woodward has spent many days in their company and will have some very interesting things to say, showing pictures of each one as they are today.

All interested are invited to be present. There is no charge for admission.
